NOIL:

The attached pages are corrected pages and should be substituted for the correspinding pages in the record.

19,257

NOIL:

The attached pages are corrected pages and should be substituted for the correspinding pages in the record.

19,257

be used for propaganda purposes.

MR. BROOKS: If the Court please, I think as defense counsel I have a right to an explanation from the Bench for such a remark cast on American counsel. I am sure I have not tried to do anything that was not proper in this Court and I have not tried to use propaganda in any way; and as I understand, the Court is reflecting that I am trying to say something for propaganda purposes and it is not true. I sincerely wish to be heard on any expression that you may have in your mind. If you have anything that I have said that you think is propaganda, I would like for you to express it so that I can avoid it if it is necessary.

Nothing I said is in doubt. American counsel as such have no terrors for us nor have any other nation's counsel. We are here to conduct a fair trial, and we are not going to be browbeaten by American Counsel or any other counsel.

MR. BROOKS: I am sorry if I have been browbeating the Court. I did not realize it, if that is true, your Honor.

meetings -- full dress cabinet meetings at which Premier OKADA and all the cabinet members were present and carefully ascertained the policies of the government.

The government's policy was to support the independence of Manchukuo and to assist its healthy development. Therefore, my greatest policy as Commander-in-Chief of the Kwantung Army, and also as Ambassador to Manchukuo, was the maintenance of peace and order in Manchuria. There are two ways in which peace and order can be maintained in Manchuria: Never to start any troubles -- any friction between the Soviet Union on the northern borders, and, to the south, never to start an incident with China. Therefore, the despatching of troops outside the border was strictly prohibited -- troops of the Kwantung Army outside the border was strictly prohibited.

THE PRESIDENT: Is this counsel of perfection required? The question is what he did.

THE WITNESS: Is that question directed to me, sir?

THE PRESIDENT: To the learned counsel cross-examining you.

MR. COMYNS CARR: Well, your Honor, I did

1 2

3

6

7

5

8

10 11

12

13

14 15

16

17

20

19

21 22

2324

25

MR. T. OKAMOTO: I think that the answer to that question is very unclear and contradictory, so I wish to have it made clear.

A The Commander-in-Chief of the Kwantung Army could be restrained in case his actions were contrary to government policy and by denying -- or when they wasted expenditures.

Q I could not understand very well your second answer -- second point.

A That is, the War Minister rejects giving funds to the Kwantung Army for -- to carry on its actions.

THE MONITOR: Mr. President, we have translated as accurately as we can the witness' reply. However, it is not logical -- I mean, the answer is not logical.

THE PRESIDINT: Give his answer. We are not concerned about the logic of it yet.

Q I shall change the wording of the question.

THE PRESIDENT: Give his answer. We are the judges of logic, not the interpreters.

THE MONITOR: I meant by "logic", it is untranslatable into a regular sentence.

THE PRESIDENT: Make the best you can of it.
THE MONITOR: Yes, sir.